

ADRIAN ALAN

Fine Art & Antiques

Royal Vienna Porcelain (1718 -)

A Finely Decorated Pair of Vienna Porcelain Vases

Circa: Circa 1890

102 x 0 cm (40 1/4 x 0 inches)

Porcelain

France

1890

The base of one reserve signed in gilt 'K. Wildner'.

A Fine Pair of Vienna Porcelain Vases with classical scenes.

Each vase is finely painted with a continuous reserve of classical allegorical figures on a pale green lustre, against a brown and cobalt ground, with gilt, pale pink and white highlights.

Artist description:

The Vienna Porcelain Manufactory was founded in 1718 only eight years after Johann Friedrich Bottger and Ehrenfried Walther von Tschirnhaus had succeeded in unearthing the secret of Porcelain Manufacture for August the Strong, Elector of Saxony. On May 25, 1718, Emperor Karl VI signed a "special privilege" awarding Claudius Innocentius du Paquier the exclusive right to produce porcelain in the Austrian crownlands. Production being almost exclusively for the imperial household and the court nobility.

During the rococo era, Empress Maria Theresia placed the company under imperial ownership and it was during this period that the manufactory began to produce the famous rococo genre scenes after Watteau. Under the management of Conrad Sorgel von Sorgenthal, the Vienna Porcelain Manufactory achieved an international reputation for its neo-classical style.

After the wars with France brought the manufactory to the brink of ruin, the Vienna Congress at the beginning of the Nineteenth Century gave porcelain from Vienna a renewed upswing. Many important personalities of the time, including Czar Alexander I of Russia and the King of Prussia, were guests of the manufactory and porcelain from Vienna became highly regarded once again.